

I recently took a trip to visit my 82 year old grandmother in New York City. On the trip I relied on XM radio for weather and traffic in both Washington DC and New York City. It was important to me to be able to reach my grandmother as soon as I could and not be delayed by traffic. XM radio makes it easy to get traffic and weather information in major cities without having to take my eyes off the road and search for a radio station that might have this information between commercials.

I pay for this service and this information and see no reason why XM radio would not be allowed to give me this information. I still rely on local radio stations for smaller city and town traffic and weather information.
